'Nothing, Something'

Marta

Terremoto is a landscape architectural design studio with offices in Los Angeles and San Francisco, California. Terremoto creates well-built, site-specific landscapes that respond to client needs while simultaneously challenging historical / contemporary landscape construction methods, materials, and formal conventions. Our design approach is post-internet, critically-regionalist, and politely inflammatory.

Terremoto believes in the ebullient exploration of form and operates under total freedom from historical form-giving systems and modes of thought. We scavenge and gnaw on the bones of Modern and Postmodern landscapes alike; we consider new, inverted futures for the Baroque and the Picturesque. We pillage and riffle with joy through the tattered fuselage of worlds East and West.

Terremoto believes that physical form is reason made visible, and thus philosophical subtexts and exploratory dialogues will eternally guide our work. Material day-dreams, scientific wandering, and the musical anarchy of horticulture, ecology, and art inform and inspire.

Guided by these beliefs and a ceaseless design discourse, we hope to create environments that are aesthetically, ecologically, and metaphysically provocative and productive. Reverence and recklessness, forever and ever.
